Challenge: The District of Columbia Courts, the third branch of the District of Columbia government, is comprised of the DC Court of Appeals, the Superior Court of DC, and the Court System. This public institution has a staff of 120 judges, 24 magistrate judges, and a professional staff of approximately 1,500. In order to meet the requirements of their high traffic areas, the DC Courts sought an architectural signage system that offered flexibility for change, durability, tamper-resistance, and standardization across all court buildings and properties.

Solution: In 2010, DC Courts conducted extensive market research and determined that 2/90's Slide Modular Sign System was the superior architectural signage system available and offered a robust product platform necessary to achieve the design objectives. To ensure the design objectives were achieved, DC Courts engaged independent design and planning firms to develop signage program standards around 2/90's modular componentry. For more than a decade, 2/90 has worked directly with DC Courts, their independent design firms, and local installers to manufacture and deliver 2/90 Slide Modular signage ensuring its effectiveness in meeting the evolving needs of the court facilities.
